A Coroner's Inquest was held, and a post-mortem examination made in each case.* The term "general paresis" has been during the last few years employed to denote the gradual loss of muscular power in the insane; it was formerly termed "general paralysis," which was objected to, as it implied a cessation of all power, i.e. death.

† Although disease of the brain is not stated in any case as the immediate cause of death, there were in every case evidences of old or recent disease in the brain or membranes, especially in the arachnoid, such as opacity, thickening, and subeffusion.
