Napier Hospital, 10th January, 1894.

The doctor is getting old, and the trustees are divided. I suggested two years ago what appeared to me to be inevitable, and I do not think any real peace is possible until some change is made. Meanwhile the institution cannot thrive. Perhaps a temporary solution might be found in the plan of having an honorary staff, with Dr. Menzies in the position of House Surgeon. I think his long service and high character would justify exceptional treatment as regards salary.

Naseby Hospital, 27th February, 1894.

This hospital is in a thoroughly satisfactory condition. The doctor is devoted to his work, and the nursing is careful and intelligent. It would be an advantage if the ventilating openings in the ceiling of the male ward were connected by tubes with Boyle's ventilators or torpedoes.
