ing that the Thomson patent tap had not been fitted to the Ballechin pipes. These were all the noises I heard in the most haunted room of 'the most haunted house in Scotland.'

A GROSS IMPOSTURE

THE STRATHTAY NAUNTED HOUSE.

THE Times of a recent date had a long article, entitled 'On the Trail of a Chost, from a correspondent who recently visited Ballechin, in Pertubbira, with the view of investigating the 'manifestations' that were said to be taking place there. For were said to be waking place there. For two or three months past (said the writer) vague rumours have been aficat in London soncerning a hannted house somewhere in Scotland belonging to the Marquis of Bute. It was described as the most hanned house in Scotland, and as being the abode of some mysterious agency producing aights and sounds of the most portentous and in-explicable character. While many people, some of them holding high positions in the scientific world, were ready to give general assurances of the awe inspiring mature these phenomena, it was unfortunately impossible to obtain precive information from any one. The most definite impression one could form was that appalling noises were to be heard, alike by day and by night, in various parts of this mantion, but more various parts of this manion, but more particularly in four rooms. Apparitions were also spokes of, though less confidently, yet it seemed to be generally agreed that the orthodox glidlug figure melting into thin air had been seen by at least one horrified observer.

Inquiries addressed to distinguished members of the Society for Psychical Research—or the S.P.R. as it is affectionately called by its votaries—elicited the information that Lord Bute had taken the house in question for three months, and had pieced it at the disposal of the society for the purpose of a thorough investigation. For reasons which are differently stated in London and in Perth, where the agent for the proprietor is to be found, Lord Bate did not take the house in his own name, but in that of Colonel Taylor. The material fact, however, is that he did take it with the object just named, installed a staff of servants, and entrusted the conduct of the the object just named, installed a staff of servants, and entracted the conduct of the of the investigation to a lady well known in connection with the S.P.R., and also for work of a different and much more valuable kind. Lord Bute's original idea was a good one, but it was never properly exriced out. Observing that the S.P.R. had made many investigations in a perfunctory and absurd manner by sending somebody to a hausted house for a couple of nights and then writing an utterly worshiese report, he desired in this case a continuous investigation extending over a sonsiderable period. He ought, therefore, to have employed a couple of intelligent detectives for the whole term, and thus secured real continuity. As whings are, the only continuity is to be found in the presence—itself not entirely continuous—of the lady just mentioned.

A GROSS IMPOSTURE.

After giving the results of his inquiries into the traditions connected with the hone, the writer concludes:—'Lord Bute's confidence has been grossly abused by some one, and, what he will probably regret even more, he has been unwittingly led to do an appreciable injury to the owners of Ballechia. It was represented to him by some one that he was taking the 'most hanned house in Scotland,' a house with an old and established reputation for mysterious, if not supernatural, disturbances. What he has got is a house with no reputation whatever of that kind, with no history, with nothing german to his purpose beyond a cloud of baseless rumours produced during the last twelve months. Who is responsible for the impostere it is not my business to know or to inquire, but that it is an imposture of the most shallow and impudent kind there can be no manner of doubt.'

LORD BUTE 'INTERVIEWED.' LORD RUTE "INTERVIEWED." A representative of the Morning Leader, who interviewed the Marquis of Bate as to the Ballechin spook hunting project, writes es follows :-

'You ere fortunate,' began his Lordship, or not only have you caught me, but to the lady who has charge of the house, also the lady wno new Miss X'
'Yes, I'm Miss —,' broke in the

THE 'MOST HAUNTED HOUSE.'

Ballechin—the ch is guttural and carries the accent—is a house pleasantly situated in Strathtay, a few miles above Dunkeld. The house was built in the second decade of the present century, but a wing was added at a much later date, and is the only part of the structure that is free from 'manifestationa.' Underneath the wing are the present kitchens, to the isolation of which a wholly under importance is attached as preclading the idea that noises wilfully or secidentally made by the servants can account for the phenomena in the bedrooms. In the centre of the house is the main staircase in a square well, lighted by a cupols and having a gallery which runs right round it, and gives access to the upper part of the main building. At one corner of this gallery is a service staircase, at the top of which is the most hauned bedroom. Adjoining this are the two next in order of phenomenal importance, while at the opposite corner of the servants alsepting rooms above, in the fourth of the haunted rooms. The house has thick walls both interior and exterior, but their thickness is exaggerated by wood casing which everywher gives a hollow sound on percussion. The rafters seem to be as flimby as the walls are substantial, for the floors wibrate on the smallest provocation, and in any of the bedrooms it is quite easy to hold a conversation with an other man in the attics. It follows that the house is one huge sounding-board, transmitting, and possibly intensitying, certain kinds of noise.

TOSSING FOS POSEESSION.

TOSSING FOR POSSESSION.

I tossed with another man for possess of No. 3, the most haunted of the roo I coused with another man for possession of No. 5, the most bannted of the rooms, and won. He contented himself with No. 1, which is the second best from an investigator's point of view. On one of the two nights that I apend in the room, I slept without disturbance of any kind until 7 o'clock, when I heard a variety of noises floating up the back staircase, and all easily translatable into the early morning activities of the servants. There is a fixed washetand with the usual waste ping. This I left open on going to bed, and as the night was windy, a sound which as ardent imagination might have converted into a moan of a soul in pain came from the end of the wastepipe a few feet below, where it overhange a trap, according to apinto a mean of a soul in pain came from the end of the wastepipe a few feet below, where it overhangs a trap, according to approved sanitary principles. The second night I was very wakeful. I read in bed until past 1 o'clock, and was awake again about 3. My fire had gone out, and the fireplace in cooling down emitted a loud crack after the manner of iron fireplaces in such conditions. A sympathetic observer would doubtless have chronicled that as a ghostly noise. A distinguished psychical researcher told me just before I left town that when one sees a ghost be of and an encounter I went out upon the gallery, but I saw nothing and heard nothing except the wind. I went to sleep after that for some three hours, and on awaking heard a pretty loud noise from the washing basin, which, however, was only the jar of a waterpipe when the water is suddenly immed off. Presently a deep barring sound indicated that a servant was drawing more water, probably in the distant wing, and was duly followed by another resonant bang, show-
