goiges in New Zesland. I used to love driving through them at one time, but now I always have a feeling that I should be safer walking. That rather spoils the pleasure, as you may imagine. Your let-ter must have been travelling around the country on its own account for a week or two, for I see it is dated July 11th. I only received it this morning, August 3. The concert is over, of course. August 3. The concert is over, of course, Did you go to it, and was it a success? No, we didn't have much rain the week was away for my holiday.-Cousin

Dear Cousin Kate,-I have had the influenza, and I could not answer the letter which I saw in the "Graphic" on Mon-I saw in the "verspoos I am starting to get better now, so that would write. The big flool I thought I would write. The big flood was not near our place, but the people was not near our place, but the people bround is were flooded, as they were on low ground. The post-cards in this week's "Graphic" are-very pretty, bon't you think so, Cousin Kate? I have read "Tom Brown's School Days," and I like it very much. That must have been a from Brown's statement that must have been a greated at Te Arobu, where you were aying. My mother and father are back one their trip to Australia. Have you their trip to Australia. We staving. from their trip to Australia. Have you ever been in Westport, Cousin Kate? We have been having bad weather lately. I think this is all the news. With love to think this is all the news. With love to you and all the other "Graphic" cousins. -From Cousin Jack.

Dear Cousin Jack - I am so sorry you Dear Coust dack—I am so serry you have been ill, and hope you are quite re-covered by this time. I can sympathise with you, for I have influenza myself nearly every year. It is such a horrid thing to have, isn't it? especially in the winter time, because one takes so much layour to not over it in the cold weather. winter time, because one takes so much longer to get over it in the cold weather. You are very lucky to be living on so much higher ground than your neighbours. It must be dreadful to be flooded out. I wouldn't mind so much in the out. 1 wouldn't mind so much in the day time, but it would be awful at night, I think. The flood I saw at Te Aroha was not a very hig one, and it did very little damage, luckily. The "Graphic" post-cards have been very pretty lately. I like the tinted ones ever so much better then the value was dan't you? I sevent. like the tinted ones ever so much better than the plain ones, don't you! I expect you are delighted to have your father and mother home again. I hope they had a pleasant trip. "No. I have never been to Westport. I should like to drive across from the other coast some day though, because I have heard so much about the grenery; it must be lovely.—Cousin

A very small boy was trying to lead a big St. Bernard up the road. "What are you going to do with the dog, my little man?" inquired a passerby.

"[--]'m going to see where-where he wants to go, first," was the breathless re-

The Adventures of Jack and Elsie

Mrs. Scott, who lived in the house across the way, said that Jack and Ebic were very spoiled children indeed. When they were very little their father and mother lived in India, and were obliged to send them over the sea to their grandmother, because the climate of India is not suitable for English children. Grandmamma and their young aunt. Emily nearly always let them do as they pleased, and they grew to be very naughty and dissatisfied, for children who always have their own way are seldom happy. When their father and mother returned, and took them to their own home, Jack and his sister used to lie on the floor and kick and scream when they could not get what they wanted.

One day Jack's mother took him for a walk in the town. When she refused to buy some bright-coloured lollies, because she knew they were coloured with some-thing that was unwholesome, the boy sat down on the sidewalk and refused to move, and when his mother took his hand, and tried to make him get up, he kicked his beers on the stones and screamed so his heers on the stones and screamed so that a great crowd collected.

Someone cried that a woman was ill-treating a child, and this brought a policeman to the spot. When Jack's mother explained what the trouble was the policeman stooped, and lifted him up. Jack was very much frightened, and thought he was going to be taken to good, so he cried out, "Let me go! Oh, please let me down, and I will go home with mamma." And he walked home very untelly indeed. quietly indeed.

next day Elsie was the naughty one. She had a beautiful doll that her uncle had given her. It was as large as a real baby, and had an open mouth with real baby, and had pretty white teeth. pretty white teeth. Elsie took it to din-ner with her, sat it on a chair beside her and began to stuff potatoes and gravy in its mouth.

its mouth.

"Elsie, don't do that," said her mother.

"You wil! spoil your doll."

"I won't 'spoil it," said Elsie, rudely.

"Annt Emily let me do it." And she went on stuffing things in the doll's mouth; for the head was hollow, and there was room for a good deal.

As she would not stop, her mother came to the chair and lifted the doll out. She looked through the open mouth, and saw that the hollow head was nearly filled with little bits of bread and meat and with little bits of bread and meat and it. Elsie had begun to stuff the poor ed with rice fruit. Elsie had begun to stuff the poor dollie some time before, and a very unpleasant odour came from the decaying meat and fruit with which the hollow head was nearly filled.

Mrs. Manning tried to shake this food out through the mouth; but the opening out through the mouth; but the opening was small, and it would not come.

"I shall have to take the head from the body and clean it, and hang it out to

" said Elsie's manma. Give me my dobie. You shan't have I will feed it if I want to," cried the naughty girl.

maniphly girl.
"I cannot allow you to spoil your doll," said her mother, "and you must not speak to me in that rude way,"
"You are not a bit kind to me. I wish you had stayed in India. I want to go back to live with grandmamma and never see you again."

Poor Mrs. Manning felt very sad when Poor Mrs. Mauning felt very sad when her little daughter said she did not love her. She was a kind and wise mother, and she would not allow her little girl to go on doing what was wrong. She took the doll away, and Elsie began to kick and scream as loud as she could. "Let's go back to grandmanman's." said. Jack to Elsie that afternoon. "Papa says a lady is coming to morrow morning to the data to transparent and screak by the same says and sowed her. We'll beach by the management of the we'll.

a lady is coming to-morrow morning to teach us, to-morrow and every day. We'll have to be in school and have no fun. Grandmanning did not make us have les-sons when we'didn't want to," "But how can we get there? It's such a long way!"
"When papa and manning go for a drive we can mack our burs, with some thines we can pack our bags with some things we want: and then when no one is looking, we can slip out through the fence in the back garden. I remember the road through the woods and the way to the station."

But I don't believe they will let us on to pay for going all the way to grand-manned's? maining s.

"Oh, we can ship in when the goard is not looking and hide under a sent. And then, I Chink, he'll let us stay on till we get to granding man's."

get to grandmanuma's So Elsie agreed to So Elsie agreed to try, and an hour later, when their father and mother had left the house, the two stole out, bags in hand and soon found themselves out-side the garden fence.

side the garden fence.

They found the path through the woods, for due; but worked that way with his father. But they were not so happy as they had expected they would be. Perhaps grandmamma would be augry and would send them back. Perhaps they could not susceed in getting on the train; or if they got on the conductor might put them off at the first station he came to far away from their grandmather's Then they away from their grandmather's. Then they came to a place where two woodland roads met, and duck could not remember which one led to the station. They took the one that he thought was right; buf it was not long before they knew they had made a mistake, for it soon became a and made a misdisc, for it soon became a very narrow, winding path through thick woods.

"O. Jack, we must go back and find the other way," said Elsie.

At that moment they heard a crackling f branches. They turned round to see ho was coming, and saw a dark, rough of branches. looking man.

Elsie was afraid, but lack said: "Please, will you tell us the way to the station? We are going to see our grandmamma.

"Yes, I'll show you; come along after me."

When they saw he was leading them further on the winding path Elsie whispered: "Oh, Jack, let's go home! I know this isn't the right way!"

know this isn't the right way!"

The man heard her, and turned quickly,
"I tell you this is the right way, and if you don't follow me you'll be lost and the bogey will catch you."
"There's no such thing as a bogey.
Grandmanuma said there was not, and you are a manghty man to frighten us."
"Hore, when you talk impand, make

"Here, step your talking and make baste," said the man, catching her hand and beginning to walk quickly. "I said I would show you the way, and I have no time to less."

He walked so fast that she was soon out of breath. At first she was too much frightened to say she would go no further. But when she grew more and more ther. But when she grew more and more size that he was not going to the sta-tion, for the wood grew deeper and there was no path to be seen, she saddenly jerked ber hand from his, and, calling to her brother, began to run back,

The man caught her in a minute, and then she threw her arms about a little tree and beld it fast, and screamed as loud as she coud. Jack, too, begon to scream and shout.

"Here, step that noise this minute," said theman. And when they did not step, for they loped their cries would bring some one to help them, the rough fellow gave the little boy a hard blow, "Now, you will come along quietly, or must 1 give you a good beating? he asked. "We'll have to go with him, Jack."

you will colde along quietly, or most I give you a good beating? he asked.

"We'll have to go with him, Jack," said Elsie, and the two sobbing children followed without another word.

It was almost dark before they saw a light shirring through the trees, and pre-sently they came to a cleared place, where there were two tents and a munher of people sitting around a fire. Then Jack and Elsie were sure that what they They were in feared was true. to hands of gypsies.

The man led them to the five foll

The man led them to the live 1044 them to sit down, and took one of the women aside, and talked to her for some time. When she returned to them she spoke quite kindly, and said she would give them some supper.

would give them some supper. Though they were frightened and unhappy, they were so hangry that they are the course food. Then the woman showed them a dryy looking heap of clothes in a covner of the tent, and told thom it was their bed. Two gipsy children were astrop on another rough bed on the ground. They had not taken hed on the ground. the chitles they had worn in the daytime.

"But I don't want to go to bed," said tion a goar want to go to bed," said liste. "I went to go home to my own mamma. And if you don't let us go home, our paga and mamma will send people to look for us; and they will put you in goal for stealing us."

"You can't go home to-night. It is m inte."

"Will you take us home to the metuing?"
"We'll see about that."
"wost, you i

"We'll see about that."
"But you must, you must, take us home." Elsie began to cry and scream, and Jack joined her.

The norm who had taken them through the weeds put his head in at the opening of the tent, and said, shaking his fist, "He quiet now, or I'll come in and give you a beating."

Buth children stopped crying at ones, and by down on the disty bed without another word.

They were very tired, and had almost fallen asleep when they heard voices outside the tent. The men and women who were falking had forgotten that they were so close to the bed where the children slept,

"Listen, dack, fisten, they are talking about us," whispered Elsie. The listeness did not hear every works

The listeners did not hear every word; but they heard enough to make them understand that the gypsics were afraid that people would soon come to the tents in search of the children. They thought the seekers would look nearesthe children's home first; but perhaps by morning they would come to the camp. And so the men and women agreed that it would be safer to pack everything into their covered wagnons and drive nway before dawn. But they would take a few hoors' sleep first. "Oh. Elsie," whispered Jack, "if they take as very far, we will never, never gethome again."

"When they are sound asleep, perhaps one agram. "When they are sound askep, perhaps can creep out," said Elsie, "Hush!" said her brother, for some one was coming into the tent.

Elsie fried to keep make till all the gypsics were asleep; but she was very fired, and when her brother shock her arm she had so far forgotten where she was that she almost called out loudly enough to wake the people in the tent.

"Oh, hush, Elsie, hush!" said her brother in a low, frightened tone. "They'll

Then Elsie remembered and was very quiet.

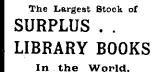

"We can erech out under the tent close by our bed," said Jack. With the four of being ranght, Elsie's heart beat so fast at first that she could not move; but presently she said; "Let's try now."

The trembling, frightened pair crept out softly. They were afraid to run yet, because they had to pass another tent, and they did not want to make a noise. They had just passed the second tent, when some dogs that were sleeping ontside began to bark,

"They'll bite us," said Elsie,
"They'll wake the people," said dack."
They heard a man's voice, and they ran as fast us their feet would carry them until they were out of the clearing, and in the thick woods.
"Elsie, if they come after us, we can't

Continued on page 57.

Offered at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Every month MUDIES publish a fresh list of their Surplus Books and New Remainders. The list contains popuher works on Sport, Travel, Biography, and Fiction, and will be sent Post Free on application to any part of the world.

All the leading English Reviews and Magazines can be sampled, new or second hand. Rates on application.

MUDIES' LIBRARY, 30-34 New Oxford Street,

LONDON, ENGLAND.

