than I could bring you, Bobby," Stuart mid.—Thank God; madam, you are alive and have found your boy!"

mid.—Thank God, madam, you are alive and have found your boy!"

"So you are the man who took my desolate son into your home and cared for him," said Mrs. Churchill. "Ab, how can I ever thank you!"

"I want so, thanka, madam, said Stuart duffy. "The boy was sent to me—by Heaven, I think—just in time."

"I do not understand."

"No." Better you should not. He is the only ray of sunshine this dingy place has ever seen. I love him," he faltered. "Oh, you are not going to take him away?"

"I never could leave Billy, mother," eried Bobby, rushing over to Stuart. "Billy. I won't go away from you."

"Billy. I won't go away from you."

"Billy. Billy Stuart!" cried Mrs. Churchill, hilt-crying, half-laughing. "In the name of Heiven, take off that nose!"

Stuart tore off the mask and whiskers, flung off the buffalo robe, and stood before her, bronzed, powerful, vital. "Dorothy, how did you know me!"

"Why, you simpleton." she cried, putting her hands in his, "I knew you the moment-yeu spoke."

"But I am dazed," he said, looking down on the radiant creature before him. "How is it you are alive!"

"Why," she gaily cried, "because I am not dead."

"Say" announced Bobby, "Tm going outside to try my sled. 111 be back in a mot dead."

"Say," announced Bobby, "I'm going outside to try my sled. I'll be back in a few minutes. Now, Billy, you want to get that gobiler in the oven."

He banged the door behind him, and the two stood alone, looking in each other's eyes. "It's a simple story, Billy," she said, "and one as old as the hills. I divorced Robert. He thea stole the child from me and brought him out to this country. I have been searching for him for years and at last I find him just where I could wish, Billy, in your home."

"Such a home!" he said bitterly.

in your home."

"Such a home!" he said bitterly.

"It has been the home of my child for a year," she tenderly replied, "and it will always be sucred to me."

"And you will carry him away!"

"I must have my boy."

"Aht" Stuart turned dejectedly away, but a light touch on his arm arrested him.

bim.

"Billy, why—why can't you come too?"

"Do you mean that, Dorothy?"

"Yes." she said, with her heart in her eyes, "I have often expretted the past, bitterly, "We were both to blame perhaps; but I did not treat you well?"

With an inarticibite exclamation Bunet went toward her.

"Wait a moment," she said gently. "I can see that you have suffered privation and hardship here. Never mind, Billy, if you haven't made your pile. I have snough for both."

"Dorothy!"

"Dorothy!"
She was in his arms now, her silken head against his heart.
"Well," said Stuart with a gleam of mead against his heart.

"Well," said Stuart with a gleam of mirth in his eyes, "we are not so blanked poor. My partner and I have just sold our claim to an English syndicate—"But she started from his arms, rosy and smiling, as Bobby burst in, dragging his sled.

"Say," he called, "suc's grea . Is that "Say," he called, "suc's grea. Is that turkey in the oven yet?"

"In one moment, kid," responded Stuart. "Come here and tell your mother how much the mine is going for." Hobby approached them. "Two—hundred—thousand—cold—hard. plunks," he said in great importance.
"Plunks!" in pretty hewilderment. :
"Dollars," solemnly.
"Two—hundred—thous—" she repeated slowly—"Why, mily, you are rich." Yes," said Stuart in the most matter-of-fact fashion, "and so is my partner."
"Who is he, Billy!" with great interest.

est.
Stuart took Bobby by the shoulders and stood him directly before his mother.
"My partner; Dorothy," he said.

SHOULD YOU POSSESS AN OLD AND FADED PHOTOGRAPH

Of some long-lost relative or dear friend, no matter how small, indultinct, or damaged, that you would like to have a good copy or enlargement made from, you cannot do better than send it to us. Out experience, extending over 26 years, enables us to give you the very finest results obtainable.

(Copies from 368 per due, Enlargements from 368 with grow for the property of the prop aipie, onciges promony.

Addres:
Antipario PHOYDARAPESED. Co., Led.,
Antipario PHOYDARAPESED. Co., Led.,
800-80, Outland Street, London, M.,
Studios open dauj'il in n. Saturiaya 10 to d.
Stabilished d.y.farm.
Under Royal Patronage.

THE SUPERSTITIONS OF CHPICTS

A great Christian festival has its penumbra. Usually it shines through a haze of Pagan myth, which it was at first unable wholly to disperse, and which formed a balo, fantastic in colour, around the central fact. This has been specially the case with Christmas in Northern Europe, where it coincided roughly with the Teutonic and Scandinavian Yule. Indeed, in Norway, King Hakon Athelston's foster son deliber-ately altered the day of the beginning of the northern feast so as to make it coincide with the Christian festival, and of the northern feast so as to make it coincide with the Christian festival, and imposed a fine to the Crown on every householder who did not brew a vat of ale against December 25th. There were three holy nights to Pagan Yule, and so at Christmas the Church had, after the Nativity, St. Stephen's, St. John's, and Innocents' Days. The Pagan Yule began with slaughlering cattle for the festivities and sacrifices; a kettle of blood was taken into the Temple and aplashed over the images of the gods. During the Yule scason, especially during the Yule scason, especially during the Yule scason, especially during the three holy nights, it was thought risky to go abroad, as then the gods and the dead raced about the world on the wind. Odin, the wild huntsman, with fire-breathing dogs, snaring souls and putting them in his huntsman's pouch, and the moon-eyed Tutursel, a white owl flying before him; Thor, also, in his chariot drawn by goats, whirding his hammer, and with his red beard streaming as auroral lights athwart the sky; Freyr as well, riding on a boar, there were grolesses goats, whirting his hammer, and with his red beard streaming as auroral lights athwart the sky; Freyr as well, riding on a boar; there were godesses also, hunting with their hounds through the clouds, and in the train followed all the souls of those who had been hanged for crimes, and all the souls of little children, piping, wailing at the windows and in the chimney.

The wind blows cold on waste and weld, it bloweth night and day. The sonis go by, 'twist earth and sky, 'liey tarry not nor stay. They fly in clouds, and flap their shrouds, When full doth Cynthia sail; At dead of night, when lacketh light, We har them sob and wall.

And many a soul with shout and howl, Doth rattle at the door.

Or rave and rant, with dance and shout, Around the louely tor.

And eke a soul, it it claimey growl, Aftripping with the rain,

To wring the wet from whoding sheet,

And gather warmth were fain,

To the present day, in the North of England, it is supposed that the wail-ing of the wind at the window, mainly at Christmas and New Year, is due to the souts of unbaptised children drifting on the wind, who sob when they see the fire flicker and the candles burn in Christian homes, to which they cannot enter to obtain light and heat, aye, and enter to obtain light and heat, aye, and rest from driving with the gale.

It was probably to travesty the Pagan gods and their Yulctide ride that mum-mers were associated with Christmas. These were disguises, and an invari-able concomitant is the old white horse that snaps its jaws. Sometimes a horse's skull is used, sometimes a hobby-horse is ridden. This white horse at Yule is Odia's steed, Sleipuir; but all this is forgotten, and now the mummers sing a song

Oh, once I lay in stable, a hunter, well and warm.

I had the best of shelter, from cold and rain, and haru:
But now in open meadow, a hedge I'm giad to find.

To shield my sides from driving sleet and wind.

Poor old horse, let bim die!

But, apparently, before Christianity had laid hold of the Northern and other peoples of Europe, some sort of Yuletide numming went on. Perhaps there was an idea that men must represent the gods in masquerade, for we find in two or three of the lives of early saints that they were nearly frightened out of their wits by having their cells invaded by parties of mumnices representing the gods of the heathen world. In Yorkshire, the mumners insist on entering shire, the mummers insist on entering the house, and they invade the kitchen, and brush the hearth, and see that all is clean and in order.

The heathen festival was to commemorate mid-winter, the solstice, the pause before the sun returned in fresh strength and light and warmth. The Icelandic Sagas teem with ghastly stories of the nurderous power possessed by the dead who were free to walk and do all the evil they liked during the Yulettide nights; and the waits and carol singers owe their origin to the efforts of Christian people to but the evil spirits, the wandering ghosts, and prevent them from doing injury in those nights when they have power. A cutious custom exists in a good many Yorkshire towns, that of ringing the devil's knell at midnight at Christians. There it is usual to toll the passing bell, giving a stroke to each year of life, then separately, after, an interval, three, three for a man; three, three, two for a woman; three, three, two for a boy; and two, two, two for a girt. strength and light and warmth. The

for a woman; three, three, two for a boy; and two, two, two for a girl.

Now, one Christmas Eve when I was curate at Horbury, near Wakefield, the first time I had been there, I had tumbled into bed at midnight, when I was startled by hearing the bell knell one hundred, then three, three, three. My bedroom looked out on the churchyard opposite the town. So I threw up the sash of the window, leant out, and awaited the sexton, in dismay at the idea of some parishioner having been awaited the sexton, in dismay at the idea of some parishioner having been allowed to die unvisited. When the ringer issued from the belfry door. "Joet" I shouled, "who is dead?" He sniggered, and gave no articulate reply. "He must have been very old," said I. "Eht!" replied he; "I reckon 'twere t'owd chap." "T'owd chap" is a delicate and expressive sobriquet for the devil.

The Christmas tree is an introduction from Germany—that is to say, the tree loaded with presents for children. But something like it existed formerly in England, but postponed to Twelfth Night. Hone, in his Table Book, describes the enstom as Brough in Westmoreland, and gives an illustration.

moreland, and gives an illustration. A holly or an ash tree was prepared with a torch attached to every bough. At eight e'clock in the evening it was carried through the town flaming at the end of every branch, attended by the town band.

To every branch a torch they tie, To every forch a light apply: At each new light send forth huzzas, Till all the tree is in a blaze; Till all the tree is in a blaze; town, With minstrelsy and reckets thrown.

With minstrelsy and reckets thrown.

The Yule tree is really a reminiscence of the Pagan World-tree, called Ygdrassil, that had its roots in helt, and whose boughs reached to heaven, where they were hung with golden apples—the stars. The Fates sat at the root of the tree by a well spinning, and cutting short the lives of men.

The usual method of recalling Ygdrassil in England was the reverse of that employed in Germany and Scandinavia. There the tree was consecrated. The Star of Bethlehem was placed above it, and the cradle of the Holy Child, with ox and ass, was set at the foot. But in England the great World-tree was typified by the ashen faggot or Yule log; it was cut down, as a figure of Paganism, destroyed, and was brought into the kitchen or half and there burnt.

Nevertheless, the old mysterious tree could not be got so easily out of the minds of men. It thrust its way into every home, and, sye, into every church, as the holly with its scarlet berries, symbols of the branches of Ygdrassil, hung with the stars of heaven. The mistletos has the same significance.

Another Christmas custom, now consider to a few college halls; is the bring-fined to a few college halls; is the bringmistletoe has the same signucence.

Another, Christmas custom, now confined to a few college halls, is the bringing in of the boar's head, "bedecked with holly and rosemary," for the Christmas feast. This was universal in baronial and squirearchal halls. It is now replaced by the roast beef. But that head had its meaning, as the song attending it shows plainly enough. That, like the ashen faggot, represented the triumph of Christinnity over Paganiam. for the head was that of the sacred beast on which Frayr rods through storm and snow at Yule. It was more—it was the head of the slaughtered beast offered in sacrifice in the temples at Yule, but now brought in "reddens laudes Domino." no longer to be the food of the gods, but for the delectation of men. delectation of men.

AWFUL PSORIASIS 35 YEARS

Terrible Scaly Humour in Patches All Over the Body—Skin Cracked and Bleeding—Itching Unbear-able—Cured by Cuticura in Thirty Days at Small Expense.

ANOTHER WONDERFUL CURE BY CUTICURA

"I was afflicted with psoriasis for thirty-five years. It was in patches all over my body. I used three cakes of Soap, six boxes. Cutic ura Ointment, and two bottles of Cutic ura Resolvent. I bathed with the Soap, applied the Ointment once a day, and took the Resolvent as directed. In thirty days I was completely cured, and I think permanently, as it was about five days I was completely cured, and I think permanently, as it was about five years ago.

The psoriasis first made its appearance in red spots, generally forming a circle, leaving in the center a spot about the size of a silver dollar of sound flesh. In a short time the affected circle would form a heavy dry scale of a white silvery appearance and would gradually drop off. To remove the entire scales by bathing or using oil to soften them the flesh would be perfectly raw, and a light discharge of bloody substance would cozeout. That scaly crust would form again in twenty-four hours. It was worse on my arms and limbs, although it was in spots all over my body, also on my scalp. If I let the scales remain too long without removing by bath or otherwise, the wkin would crack and bleed. I suffered intense itching, worse at nights after getting warm in bed, when it would be almost unbearable. I would not go through such another ordeal of affliction for thirty-five years for the State of Kansas. W. M. Chidester, Hutchinson, Kan., April 20, 1005."

The original of the above testimerial to m file is the office of the Potter Fing & Chemical Copyright. Corp. Side Proper Board, I S. A. say Meline Free, "How to Care all Humours." Address R. Towned Co., Sydury, N. S. W. years ago.
"The psoriasis first made its appear-

Tellictimo has permanently cured them the saids of sufferers from Rheumatians front Sciation, and Lumbigo, it will cure you. All stores, E/S and 4/6. Give it 4