The New Zealand Graphic for September 28, 1907

See a strate top in the second second

On Thursday New Zealand assumed the dignity of the title of a Dominion. At such a time, a brief glance back over the early history and progress under European occupation of this, the first colony added to the Empire under the sovereignty of Queen Victoria, may not be out of place:

THE DAYS OF MAORI OCCUPATION.

Estimates of the time that has elapsed since the Maoris first arrived in New Zealand differ very much, but the best zeamin thief very mich, out its toes estimates place it at four or five hundred years. According to tradition, Turi, a chief of Hawaika (the identity of which can only be conjectured), first reached these shores, with the members of his tribe, in a canoe called Aotea, landing at Witikau, a bay between Taranaki and Wanganui. Turi obtained his knowledge of the oxistence of the islands from Kupe, who had sighted New Zealand, and, returning to Hawaike, reported his discovery. Another canoe called Toko-maru, from the same place, commanded by a chief mamed Manaia, arrived, and a considerable immigration followed. The new arrivals found a peaceable race of people, called Morioris, already in pos-session of the land. These they speedily subdued and externinated, or enslaved, the only remnant of this people, who pre-served their racial characteristics till modern times, bring the inhabitants of the Chatham Helanda, whose isolation protected them from destruction by the more masterful race. The invaders estimates place it at four or five hundred The Control of the from destruction by the more masterful race. The invaders spread over the North Island, and ob-tained a footing on the South Island. Being divided into tribes hostile to each other, they were often at war, a fact which accounts for the increase being smaller than might have been anticipat-ad. It is doubtful-if at any time the ed. It is doubtful if at any time Maoris numbered more than 120,000.

DISCOVERY BY EUROPEANS.

DISCOVERT BY BUDDELASS. Some time during the 16th century the cology was for the first time visited by Europeana. No definite records of any expedition are known to be extant, but everything points to a visit having been paid the islands before the time of Tasman. Of the visit of Tasman there exist good accounts, and it is evident that the Dutchman, who never landed in the country, was, after the massacre of Lasman. Of the visit of Taxman there exist good accounts, and it is evident that the Dutchman, who never landed in, the country, was, after the massacre of one of his boat's crew at tiolden Bay, only too anxious to kave the vicinity of the land he had judvertently, stumbled. upon. His object was to suit to the oastward, and, missing Cock's. Strait, owing to a gale, he coasted along as far as the North Cape. At the Three Kings he made an effort to land, but the ap-pearance of a number of Maoris on the shore mach him lift anchor and sail away. This was in 1642, and from that date till the first appearance of Cook in . the 370-too frigate Endeavour, some 127 years, later, there is no reliable account of any mavigator visiting New Zealand. As showing what an Endefinite idea Tas-man had obtained of the colony, it may be montioned that he named it Staten Island, apparently under the impression that it might possibly be a part of Terus del. Furgo, which had some time before been discovered by a Dutchman, and that appearing on an old chart showing didefinitely the northern 'part of the North Island. Cook's researches, which extended over four 'yoyages and compris-d' 327 days speut in the colony, were so thorough that the map he made is re-cognised as being wonderfully accurate. He was severe on the native, but gained their respect. Previous to his voyages the only four-focied animals that the Maoria possessid were a small rat and a mongrel dog, which they had brought to New Zealand with them. Cook gave them pigs, fowls, and seed potatoes.

A LAND WAITING A CLAIMANT.

The English Government declined to avail themselves of the new hand which Cook reported so favourably on, and had avail themselves of the new land which Cook reported so favourably on, and had taken possession of in the name of the King. Whalers and sealers found its coast, however, a profitable fishing ground, and early in the 19th century established a settlement at Kororarcka. The Maoris were at this time a pople of flexible ethics, and Kororarcka, in its earliest stages, inhabited by convicts es-caped from the Australian penal settle-ment and the riff-raff of whaling vessels, was for a considerable period a scene of most horrible orgies, and undoubtedly a blot on colouisation. Following on this early settlement by the scun of civilization came the missionaries. The Rev. Samuel Marsden, whose dream it had been for many years to Christiauiss the natives, arrived at Hokiaiaga in 1814. It speaks well for the whole-hear-ed and disinterested body of men who were the pioneers of missionary work in New Zealand that they obtained such a hold over the turbulent natives. Cer-tain it is that the Maoris appreciated the practical instruction in the ways of civilisation that the missionaries im-parted; and, the religion they preuched appealed to their emotional and poetic mature. Great as was missionary in-fluence over the Maoris it was not powerful enough to prevent the tarrible intertribal wars that were waged be-tween 1820 and 1840. THE STEPS PRECEDING ANNEXA-

THE STEPS PRECEDING ANNEXA-TION.

THE STEPS PRECEDING ANNEXA-TION. The English Government, although they had so long declined to take over New Zealand, did not reflect in this mat-ter the attitude of the English public at least was inter-sted in the reports from the far-off islands. It was perhaps the influence of the unissionaries, who de-sired New Zealand as a field to work out their own designs in, that prompted the reply of the Dake of Wellington, then Prime Minister, when in 1820. In naswer to a deputation, he field y refused to take any steps to bring New Zealand within the pale of the Empire. The New South Wales Government, neverthe-less, felt called upon, owing to the impe-mmber of whitrs at that time resident at the Bay of Islands, to do something. They therefore, in 1834, appointed Mr James Busby as Resident at Korarareka. He was not personally popular, and, be a sincure. In 1838 then New Zealand Company was formed in London to carry out a system of colonisation devised by Ed-ward Giblon Wakefield on behalf of the Com-pany, and owing to the lasty despatch of enlights from England Lip pinters of welling to the lasty despatch of enlights for England Lip pinters of Wellington bad a rough time of it for some years. The missionaries, in 1833, became covinced of the fact that the French were anxious to colonise New Zealand and they reluctantly carm to the conclusion that the only way out of the dilemma was annexation, by Kaland and they reluctantly carm to the conclusion that the only way out of the dilemma was annexation, by THE TREATY OF WAITANGT.

THE TREATY OF WAITANGI.

Governor, Hobson landed at the Bay of Islands on January 29th, 1840, with his commission as Governor in his pocket, and in May was signed the Treaty of Waitangi, which acknowledged the movereignty of Queen Victoria over the is-lands, while recognising the titles of the natives to their lands. It is strange what small incidents have a marked effect on big events. Of the chiefs assembled who small incidents have a marked effect on big events. Of the chiefs assembled who spoke on the treaty the only strong sup-porter of the proposed annexation was the powerful Taurni Waka Nene, of the Ngapuhi tribe. After a long list of chiefs had spoken one arose and in great excitement addressed His Excellency to the effect that the Maoris would not con-sent to part with their lands. His ex-cited gestures reemed almost a menses to many spectators ignorant of the gist of his remarks, and on resuming his seat he was taken to task by the next speaker, who taxed him with incivility to the Gov-erner. Still excited, the supposed of-fender leaped on the platform and ex-tended his hard to Governor Howon in token of good feeling and his wish of being rightly understood. His Excel-lency advanced and gravely shook his hands. This was the signal for a roar of delight from the natives and a loud cheer from the Europeans, who crusid-ourably from this simple action of one of the principal opnosers. . The effect was marical. The feeling of of the principal opposers.

of the principal opposers. The effect was magical. The feeling of the Maoris changed from one of g owing opposition into acquirescence. Only one dissentient voice was raised, and that the voice of Bishop Pompallier, who, being a Frenchman, had other designs for the future of the colony. Fifty chiefs signed the treaty. Proclamation of sovereignty over the South Island was not declared till July, 1846, just in time to forestall the French warship L'Aube, which had come out to take the islands in the name of France. of France.

AUCKLAND CHOSEN AS CAPITAL

AUCKLAND CHOSEN AS CAPITAL Governor Hobson quickiy decided that Russell, the town he founded on arrival at the Bay of Islands, was not a suitable capital. In dealing with the site eventu-ally selected on the banks of the Waite-unata, Mr. Reeves, in his book, kays:--"He made so good a choice that his name is likely to be remembered therefore as long as New Zealand lasts. By found-ing the City of Auckland he not only took up a strategic position which cut the Maori tribes almost in half, but selec-ted an unrivalled trading centre. The narrow neck of land on which Auckland stands, between the winding Waitemata on the cast, and the bronder Manukau Harbour on the west, will, before many years, he sprend from side to side, by a great mercantile city. great movematile city

Governor Holson died at Auc'lund in 1842, and in 1843 arrived to succeed him Governor Fitzcoy. The latter got things into such a pretty pickle that in 1845 he was replaced by Unplain George Grey, who had extricated South Australia from her territory. who hal extricated South Austrain from her troubles. A war with a section of the Ngapuhi tribe under licke and Kaw-hiti in the north, which Fifzay had con-ducted with fatal results to British pre-tize. Grey, by decisive and active steps, tight is the section of the section of the section the section of the section of the section of the tight is a section of the ducted with mital results to initial pre-tige, Grey, by decisive and active steps, quickly suppressed, but trouble with the natives in the Wellington province, tak-ing the form of a gherilla warfare, al-though not characterised by any serious engagement, took longer to completely sharm out stamp out.

EARLY TROUBLES.

Many of the troubles and anxieties of the early settlers will probably remain unwritten history. The (lovernment was supported by a wholly insufficient mili-tary force, and hast to rely very much upon the gondwill of the chiefs. The first serious alarm among the settlers of the North was caused by the intelligence of the fail of Kororareka, and the news that Heke meant to attack Actkland. It was reported at the time that 2000 natives were willing to join him in am Many of the troubles and anxieties of expedition against the capital. A special meeting of the Legislative Council, held on March 15, 1945, order-ed that the Auckland barracks be made impregnable against musnelu on March 15, 1845, order-ed that the Auckland barracks be made impregnable against mus-ketery for the protection of women and children, and that all the male in-habitants be sworn in special constables. At a much later period the Govornment was unable to punish native offenders when opposition was offered. The Hon. Mr Swainson, in his interesting work on New Zealand, relates a case where a na-tive, convicted of their and sentenced in the court at Auckland, was rescued by his friends in court who had been listening to the trial, and, upon its con-clusion, started up and, brandishing their to-mahawks, carried off the prisoner in the face of Judge and court officers. In 1851, Auckland was threatened with at-tack, arising out of the difficulty in executing justice. A native had been classe of theft, when a scuttle cusued, and an innocent chief was knocked down by a native policeman and lodged in word have of mer filterents. and in innocent chief was knockel down by a native policeman and lodged in gaol, but et once liberated. The chief left in high dudgeon and, returning with three hundred armed warriors, landed in Mechanics' Bay, and demanded that the policeman be given up. By a diplo-matic negotiation his wrath was appeaa-ed and he departed in peace. Upon the whole, however, justice was very fairly administered even in those days between natives and Europeans.

GRANTING OF A REPRESENTATIVE CONSTITUTION.

From 1840 to 1852 the colony was governed by an Executive and Legisla-tive Council, nominated by the Crown to act in conjunction with the Govern-vent Several evaluation for the former to be the former to be a several to be a several to be a several former to be a several f to act in conjunction with the tovern-ment. Several proposals for a representative constitution were pro-pounded, but were pronounced un-suitable for the preuliar cir-cunstances of the colony.—the absence of any central point of settlement, and the difficulties of communication b tween the action dearway the cost cumulances of the colony--the absence of any central point of settlement, and the difficulties of communication between the settled communities along the cons-trendering the framing of a Constitution adapted to the requirements of the com-try a difficult task. But, although de-prived of a voice in the courtol of colo-nial matters, the settlers were encour-aged by Sir Geo. Grey during his first term of Governorship to exercise large functions of self-government. He created extensive endowments, and granted a charter to the settlers of Auckland of a very liberal character, which endowed them not only with all the powers of am English municipality within the city, but compowered them to administer the af-fairs of the surrounding districts, where extellment was mpidly extending. But the colonists exhibited great indiffer-ence; the country settlers were afraid of being taxed by the citizens, and allowed to a colony, was passed through the source of nischler. It created a Colo-nial Legislature, consisting of two Cham-bers and a noninated Legislative Coun-city it also divided the colony into six provinces—Auckland, Welling (to Tara-naki), Nelson, Canterbury, and Olago, with Frovincial Legislative Coun-cil, it also divided the colony into six provinces—Auckland, Welling (to Tara-naki), Nelson, Canterbury, and Olago, with Frovincial Legislative Coun-cil count, settlement prospered rapidly in each of the six isolated centres. The first sexten of the Goveral Assembly un-der the new Constitution was convented for May 24, 1854, by Licentenant Colone for the new Constitution was convened for May 24, 1854, by Lieutenant-Colonel Wynyard, C.B., the officer is command of the troops, who became Administra-tor of the Government during the sta-