Popular Legal Delusions.

Considering the innumerable times the question has been answered in print, it is quite astonishing the number of times the question arises as to the legality of the marriage of second consins. "I know first consins can marry," runs one letter, "but I am told that second consins can't." It is difficult to explain the origin of this delusion, because there is nothing in the term "second consin" to suggest a nearer relationship than first consin.

Landlords who have weekly tenants are much in the labil of persuading them to pay their rent formightly or mouthly, in order to be in a position to bluff them into believing that if they wish to leave they must give a fortnight's or a mouth's notice, which is not the case.

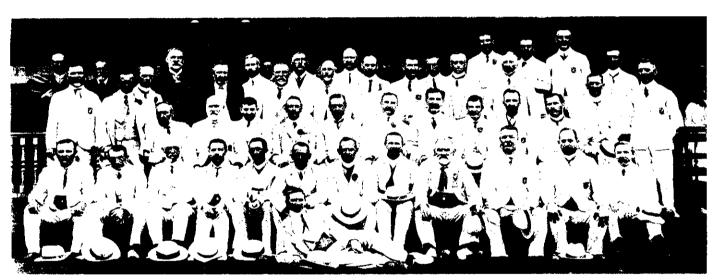

In connection with money in Chancery there are many delusions, the principal of which is that estates that once get into Chancery never get out again. Persons who are remotely connected with somebody who 50 years ago was believed to have become entitled to some money which he unver got, seek advice as to the lest way to go about getting the money. Perhaps it is too much to expect the general public to understand the procedure by means of which claims under wills of intestacies can generally be effectually dealt with within a reasonable period. It is true, of course, that there are very large dormant funds in Chancery, but it is equally true that they are there, for the most part, because there really is no fiving person entitled to them.
