The Ouest of the Pearl.

with which these divers coat thenkelves before entering the water, gathering itself for its spring. He carries the inevitable bags, but he needs no weights to sink him, nor does he wear a role. A flash, and down he goes, head first, graceful as a panther, straight as a die, with-Sul as a panther, straight as a die, with-out a splash, and swims to the bottom. Wonderful swimmers these Arabs are, recklessly daring, and with incredible powers of endurance, but their intract-ability and hatred of discipline. And in this connection it is a curious fact that when under water men will invariably become irritable and extremely bad tem-pered.

pered. All through the morning the work goes on. Men disappear in the green depths, and reappear, clambering, drip-ping, up the laddlers that swing over the boats' sides; and always, with extends ping, up the ladders that swing over the boats 'sides; and always, with astonish-ing rapidity, the piles of shells grow larger. Sharp at noon the superinten-dent's boat whistles: the last diver is pulled up; dingy sails are spread, and the fleet starts for home. Inshore the boats race, piling themselves up on the beach like a school of stranded fish. The mandaks stagger through the shallows Jaden with baskets of shells, which, under police guard, they take to the kot-tus. By this time

FANDEMONIUM REIGNS UPON THE BEACH.

A hunderd tongues mingle in the chamour: Arabie, Malay, frantic Chinese chatter-ing, Hindoostanee, profame and exasperat-ed English. A thousand naked mandaks sweat and strain ankle deep through the shifting sand under the heavy baskets; ongry guards menace and hustle unruly trouble-makers; merchants and apec-tators hurry toward the guarded kottus. And always the sam beats down on the shifting risk with their shifting risk of colour, and on the ocean that glares whice-hot, like molten metal; and pre-sently, mingled with the olours of the willage, there rises a faint, deady stench from the million dead sheltish. Faint at first, but, as the hours go by, gaining in power and volume, until by the third or fourth day one's senses are drowned in it. It takes a long time and strong nerves to accept it with equanimity; one wonders how the (forerument men near the sense not to mind it in the least. A hunderd tongues mingle in the clamour : natives, they seem not to mind it in the

Now the first stage of the quest is over: the overes are gathered, and by sundown the eight hugh kottus, each one containing 25 subdivisions, are filled to the brim.

to the brint. First the divers precive their shares, to each man going the portion that is de-creed to lim by the Law of the Fishing. This he carries outside the stockade, and disposes of in small lots of 10, 20, 60, or 100 shells to the swarm of mer-chants and small buyers who jam and crowd and jostle in the open space be-fore the stockades. Everywhere deals are going on between half naked divers and stately. dirty merchants, whose and stately, dirty merchants, whose robes flap about their lean shins as they Tobes hap about their lean shins as they bury from one man to another and back ngain, hawk-eyed for bargains, shrieking that Allah must bear witness that they are poor men, and cannot stand such bloody extortion. But none the less, they buy and buy. Here an old fellow wifn a Jeaked none will there and fellow wifn a Jeaked none they buy and buy. Here an old fellow with a beaked nose and there, eagle eves, bearded, and tur-hawed and villainously dirty, has pos-served himself of 30 or 40 fine, large shells. Down he squate, beneath the very feet of the pressing thousands, wrenches open a shell, and pokes with his claw-like fingers into the mass of fiesh. In a moment he finds a pearl—not a very good specimen, but into his pouch it goes, while with his free hand he reaches for another shell from his pile. Some-times rage and disgust inflame, his swarthy features; he fings the oyster from him, cursing its fathers and its mothers for four generations back; it has contained no pearl at all. But sud-denly, opening a peculiarly large shell, he stops short. Triumph, eagerness, and greed inserved instantly by craft and conning. He holds a pearl worth more than a prime's ranson, perfect, bustrous, a guacous thing of beauty. He fondles it lovingly in his skinny hands, gue sing shrewdy as to its weight. It came from the last shell is his pile; with caue from the last shell in his pile; with a swift glance around to see whether his prize has been observed, he drops it carefully into his greasy pouch, and flaps off after more shells, loudly com-plaining that never—ao, never— before did Allah create such an utterly worthless lot of swists. Beaule shift she sould exceed te such an utterly worthless lot of systers. Pearls—baht who could expect to get pearls from such swines of oysters1 their enormous black hands and crude tools manipulating the tiny globules with a marvellous definess and dexicrity. Boats are being repaired, and sails and baskets mended in preparation for the Boats are being repaired, and sails and baskets mended in preparation for the naxi day's work; fires are starting up here and there, and cooking is going on. The divers are tired and hungry, and must be well feel, since again no food may be taken until the next night; and the thousands of shells in the kottus must be disposed of as rapidly as possible to make room for the morrow's catch. So all the beach hums with activity: the

must be disposed of as rapidly as possible to make room for the morrow's catch. So all the beach hums with activity; the crowd around the kottus eeems to in-crease momently; and through and under all the frenzied racket, one is aware, -ud/euly, that the tom-toms are throb-bing and the reeds are shrilling their barbaric discord, insistent, suggestive, the dominant under-note of the East. After dimer, at nine o'clock or there-abouts, the bulk of the shells is put up at auction by the Government Agent. who is overlord of the Fisheries and all that pertains thereto. The sale takes place in the courthouse, or other govern-ment building, and the shells are put up in lots of a thousand. A merchant holds up both hands, the fingers outspread; his name is put down for ten lots, or ten thousand shells. Not a few of the Indian merchanis buy as many as a million. The largest number known to have been offered on a single night is 1,567,600; the smallest, 400,000.

Every night the same men are on and-until their limit is reached, or the fishing is over. Every night, too, they are joined by a sprinkling of new arri-vals. The game is much of a lottery, vals. The game is much of a lottery, since the purchaser cannot tell what per-centage of his shells will contain pearls. From the government the buyers pur-chase the shells; from each other, such pearls as they want, effecting thus a double system of exchange. An English-man, who pertaps is matching pearls that later will be made into a mecklace which his bing will be not a sould bride that later will be made into a necklace which his king will give to a royal bride, is a centre of attraction. Hundreds of pearls are brought to him for examina-tion; are weighed and rigorously tested as to colour and sphericity. An agent for one of the big New York jewellers holds equal attention; he is looking for pink pearls for the necklace of an holds equal attention; he is looking for pink pearls for the necklace of an American heiress who will shortly be-cume, if not royal, at least as mear it as she can. And here is a sauve, dusky gentleman, low-voiced, always courteous, buying for, let us say, the Rajah of Lahore, and outbidding everyone in sight for any gem that takes his fancy, with perfect nonchalance and a credit that is obviously inexhaustible. For the Nonr-mahal of to-day must have her whins fulfilled; and her latest longing is for an entire robe of pearls—a garment of Infailed; and her latest longing is for an entire robe of pearls—a garment of gauze sewn so thickly with pierced gems that searcely an inch of it will be seen. Its weight will make it cling close to her slender limbs; its lustre will enhance the dark softness of her beauty and the gleam of her shadowed eyes, and its cost clude her rivals from having anything in the least like it. And she will get if, too, since her lord and master loves her with sufficient unreason, and since it is too, since her lord and master loves her with sufficient unreason, and eince it is for her pleasure alone that the fisheries exist at all, and the oysfers in their tens of millions yield up their sluggish spark of life—that yet is vital enough to pro-dure a thing perfect enough to please her second tense. wayward fancy, they are first sorted according to size. This is done by passing them through a set of ten small brass sieves, called baskets, with meshes of varying sizes. Pearls of the first class that are perfect both in sphericity and in lustre are called ani. Those of the second class, that to the average observer seem equally with the great Southern (roas Pearl, which is out flaw, are anitari: and most of the out flaw, are anitari; and most of the pearls we see in the West and on general sale come under this head. Of the third class, called masauku, are those that are what irregular in shape, and a trifle in colour, but that are valuable for "off" in colour, but thas are valuable for use in elusters, and are largely used by Eastern artificers in mountings of various sorts. Kural is the double or twinned pearl, which when of good lustra and sufficiently freakish shape, is some-times enormously valuable. In this class the most wonderful apscimen on record is in scality nine pearls, naturally grown together, and forming a perfect cross an inch and a half long. It was found off the coast of Western Australia in 1874. the coast of Western Australia in 1874. Many seed pearls and rejections—called vadivu—are generality ground into chunam and used as an ingredient in a favourite sweatmeat. From Caina also comes a heavy demand for seed pearls, and in India bushels of them, literally, are used in the decoration of idols and sacred images, and of weapons as well. Pearl oysters are of two varieties— the large white shell, and a smaller black species; but which produces the best pearls is an undecided question. Prob-ably there is little choice. One rule that does seem to hold good, however, is that the pearl. Popular belief long held that the nucleus of the pearl was a grain of sand, or some minute foreign body, that got wedged into the oyster's shell, and, if the immate were unable to expet it, gradually became coated with the line line line section of the wedged into the oyster's shell, and, if the inmate were unable to expet it, gradually became coated with the unikly, line-like secretion of the fish. Lately, science has turned its merci-less searchlight on this theory, and, as with many others of our old-time, tender-ly cherished notions, has rudely disprov-el it. Even more humble than a grain of sand is the pearl's origin—a lowly Platyelmian parasite that dies within the shell, and is entombed in its wonder-ful sarcophagus. Out of several hundred pearls decalcified with intent to probe their inner mystery, not more than three or four revealed any other core than the remains of these tiny worms; and in the white as well as the black shells, in coloured pearls as well as porientals. The ishing may last a month, or two

The ishing may last a month, or two months, and its average value to the government is a million rupees-about f04,000. In Australia, where equally ex-tensive operations are carried on, the average value is f294,000, or 1,438,560 dollars. Singupore is the senter for average value is 2296,000, or 1,438,560 dollars. Singapore is the centre for labour and supplies of the Queensland fisheries, and is one of the largest pearl markets in the world. Now the fishing is over. The fleet of smelly boats departs; the crowds dwindla and disappear, each unit richer by a pouchful of jewels. And the pearls are gone too—gone to be mounted or strung together as playthings for women the wide world over. The beat of the ton-tom and the plaint of the reeds are no longer heard, and fires on the beach die down; and the ragged little brown vil-lage settles down once more into its age-old tranquility. All the excitement is over---until the next time.

A WONDERFUL MEMORY.

A WONDERFUL MEMORY. E. C. Laston, who has issued a chal-lenge to the world for the memory cham-pionship, although only a young man et 23 years, is a veritable walking encyclo-paedia (says "Tit Bits"), for he has memorized 40,000 dates of the principal events in the world's history, since the creation. It was quite by accident that he discovered that he had an exceptional gift of memory. He was being trained as an army officer when an attack of rheumatic fever dispelled his hopes in that direction. At that time he hap-pened to meet the Zancigs in India, who, noting what a remarkable memory he had for dates, advised him to cultivate it. He then purchased a copy of Haydn's "Dictionary of Dates," and sought to commit to memory the dates of the most important events in the world's history by writing 50 to 100 dates on a piece of paper, and rewriting them three or four times until he had fully grasped them, with the result that he has a re-pertoire of thousands of dates, and ean give the correct answers without the slightest hesitation. the correct answers without the slightest hesitation.
