welcome. He travelled in England, Bcotland, France, Germany, and Italy. Of himself in his youth he wrote: "My ears quickened at the sound of un-corking the wine-diask, for I took great pleasure in drinking and in fair array and in delicate and fresh cates." This character he maintained more or I as all his life, for he was a most geniat companion, and no man has ever lived who enjoyed life with greater zest.

The town marsbal of Elnora, in In-diana, was called to the telephone the other day by John Ketchem, a farmer, who lives eight miles away. "You have a warrent for my arrest," shonted Ket-chem. "Please be good enough to read-it." The officer did as requested, and ndded: "Consider yourself in charge." "Certainly," replied Ketchem. "I Plead guilty to being drunk and incap-able." The officer then called duigo Hastinga to the telephone, who serverly rebuked Ketchem, and fined him one Taskings to the telephone. Who severely reluked Ketchem, and fined him ore half-penny, and twopence costs." "Thanks," come the reply, "Moncy shall be sent on by next post."

Great preparations are being made by the Dominion Government and by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the advent of new cettlers in the western part of the Dominion this spring. This month 500 families will arrive in Manitoba to settle on land secured from the Govern-ment. They are going into the Dominion from the United States under the aus-pices of a Roman Catholic mission, whose headquarters is in Minnesota. At Re-gina, still further west, settlers are ex-pected as soon as the weather permits, numerous land grants having seen taken up in that district, with the result that hand values have increased very materi-ally. ally.

America is exploiting a new system of advertising the lowest novel. The book must be morbid, choked with anguish, and purple passion. The author dis-appears and leaves a note belind, saying this vale of tears is beyond him. His tors vine of tears is beyond him. His publisher sends an innouncement of his death to the papers, and affixes it to all advertisements, worlded something like the following: — SNOOKS.—By suicide. Edwin Angelies Speaks, and a set Auvernsements, workey something first the following: - SNOOKS.-Pdy suicide. Edwin Angelus Snooks, poet and man of genius, and author of "Out of the Line-light" (just published), in his twentich year, etc., etc. -----

He was a man of about 45, short and stout, and dressed like thuse extremely impecunious linanciers, the Yurra-bank-ers. His foldnes were very old and very mixed, and looked as if they had come to him through a long succession of wear-ers each more poverty-stricken than the previous one. His nose was red, and he window of a small suburban post office near Mellourne, and said to the young man inside, "I say, young feller, do I get them income tax schedules here?" "We supply income tax schedules," replied the youth. "Well, ginime one, will you?" The postal official looked surprised. "You hnow it isn't necessary to fill these in un-less you are earning about 8/ a day," he said. "Ob, I know all about that, replied the heat, "I'm not earning cight farthings a day, but early last year I carned about $1500. I boosed it up in seven months, and now The rather interested, wonder-ing how the Government's going to col-lect my income tax." He was a man of about 45, short and

The new could opera, in which Miss Edna May is to make her re-appearance in London, is now in active rehearsal. The contracts with Mr Faul M. Potter (of "Trilby" fame), who has written the libretto, and with Mr fashle Stuart for the music, were made nearly a year ago, but Messrs Charles Frohman and there a Edwards who are to archive for the music, were made nearly a year ago, but Messrs Charles Frohman and George Edwardes, who are to produce the opera, have only recently received the completed work. The piece is in three acts, and is eutilted "The School Girl." The first act takes phace in the gardens of a convent in Paris, which, with their nir of seedusion, will form a delightful contrast to the scene in the second act. This presents the interior of a stockbroker's office, with clerks and typewriters at work on the details of a trust floation. In this scene, Miss Edna May, the school girl of the first act, is mistaken for the new typewriter, and becomes the recipient of innumer-shle confidences, which heighten the in-trigue of the piece. The third act is set in a Paris studio. In addition to Miss Edna May, Miss Marie Studholme, and Miss Ella Snyder-a rare quar-tetto of beauty and talent-have been engaged for leading parts, and Mr George Edwardes has induced Miss Vio-Miss let Cameron to return to the stage in order to sing the important "numbers" allotted to the mother superior in the first act.

"Why must a driver of an automobile "Why must a driver of an automobile look like a mountain goat in order to keep in the fushion?" Such is the prob-lom propounded by a correspondent to an English paper. The growing weind-ness of motoring clothes, he asserts, ness of motoring clothes, he asserts, makes the notorist such a fearsome ob-ject that some reform is urgent. "When I purchased my motor-car," said one prominent business man, "I thought it was for the purpose of riding about. The real object, however, seems to be to give motor-car tailors a chance to sell me strange garments that I do not want, but which are considered indis-pensable for every well-conducted auto-nobile establishment. And the fashions pensatile for every well-conducted auto-mobile establishment. And the fashions are getting worse. The driving-coats are becoming heavier and more un-wieldy. An able-bodied man feels help-less when hidden in one of these bulky garments. A small man looks like a doormat, while the fat man resembles an animated ball of fur." A dealer in an animated ball of fur." A dealer in motoring garments admitted that the tendency was towards more ample and expensive coats. He defended the "mountain goat disquise" by emphasis ing its warmth. The public in general does not view the new fashions with approval. The other day the proud owner of a 20 h.p. Mercedes stud on the pavement in front of a Pall Mail Club, struggling into the depths of a huge hair-covered coat. A costermon-ger who witness the operation stopped and regarded bin with tender interest. and regarded bin with tender interest. "Ullo, matey," he said, admiringly, "bit's lovely. Cut us off a pup!" Similarly a street urchin, after wander-ing around a shaggy motorist in Re-gent-street, in a vain effort to discover "which end bites," came to a baffled halt, and exclaimed, "Bow-wow, Fido-shake yerself."

A New South Wales federal legislator becaute the owner of a new motor launch became the owner of a new motor famich, and with a select party he started it on its maiden trip down Sydney Har-bour. All wont well until the refresh-ment call at Clarke Island came to an end, and an attempt was made to re-sume the journey. "Just turn the little and, an altempt was made to re-sume the journey. "Just turn the little easy confidence of the expert. An oblig-ing member of the party turned the wheel," ordered the barty turned the wheel, wit: the dotermination of an ex-perienced, miner at a windlass. But without success. When he gave up all took turns at turning the wheel, but to no effect. As a police boat approached the owner of the hunch was forced to host signals of distress. "We'll tow you back," offered the policeman; but such an indignity was too much, and the offer was declined. An hour was spent in trying to master the mysteries of the machinery. Then one of the water police word, "I think you turn that wheel to oner was decimely. The most provides a specific of the machinery. Then one of the water police work, if think you turn that wheel to make her go," and suiting the action to the word he sent the launch skimming over the harbour. Afterwards it was necessary to slow down, and the launch suddenly came to a stop in mid-harbour, near the berth of H.M.S. Phoebe. A suggestion to make fast to the man-o'-war and obtain assistance was mot with the objection that the sentry would probably order the bot taway. "If he does, I'll vote against the naval subsidy," said the owner of the launch; but happily such an imperial tragedy was averted, and the motor was once more put in working order. Next, without warning, it dashed straight for the side of the Phoebe, and the ramming of that man-o'-war was averted only by the proup-titude o a Melbourne visitor, who gave the launch a sudden tura at immingnt risk of talline into the moutu of a big shark which was hovering about.

The recent unfortunate illness of the King, which caused the visit to Chats-worth to be postponed, brings to mind the enormous cost which has to be borne by entertainers of Royalty. A week-end visit from King Edward, if he were on your visiting-list, would cost you just about £5000, exclusive of special enter-tainment. Lord Knollys, King Edward's private secretary, writes to the host, giving the smallest details of cverything required, and all the King's likes and dis-likes. His Mojesty takes his own cigars with him; he is only allowed five a day by his doctor. He must not be served with indian tea, but prefers the China kind. Tea, by the way, is the first neces-sity in each day, and the host is instruct-ed to have a service of it taken to the King's bedchamber at 8 s.m. Breakfast must be ready to the minute at nine, and served in the King's private room. Lord Knollys instructs the host break, but, to keep his weight down, must eat rusks instead. The King breakfasts by himself and most of the morning is taken up with State business. When that is finished, His Majesty joins the house-party. A and most of the norming is taken up with State business. When that is finished, His Majesty joins the house-party. A list of the other guests has to be sub-mitted to the King, before he comes, for his approval; in fact, he suggests him-self the number that shall be asked, and some of their names. If you are asked to a house-party that includes the King it is equal to an announcement that the King wonts to see you, and it is just as un/gent that you should go as it would be if you were commanded to Windsor. Resides this the host must send the King a list of the anuscments he is preparing tor him beforehand. At Saturday, April 18, 1903.

Lunch, at two o'clock, costs, with wines, about five pounds per head. Only the fineat and costliest vintages in the world are o...red to the King. Then comes the afternoon's shooting — King Edward is one of the best shots in Britain—and when the shooting party returns there must be a good solid tea ready for him in his rooms. Dinner is at returns there must be a good sond rea ready for him in his rooms. Dinner is at eight &'clock. IX is especially 1. A down before the visit that dinner must not last longer than an hour, for King Ed-ward dislikes dawdling for a long time over dessert and wine, as the Georgian habit was. He drinks little, but of finest over dessert and wine, as the Georgian habit was. He drinks little, but of finest quality, and the dinner whi cost a clear six pounds a head. When the ladies have gone the King smokes his fourth cigar of the day, leaving one for the last thing at night. When the part- mores to the drawing-room there will be some music, which settles down into cards until bed-time. In most games the King stakes in five - pound units, but when "bridge" is played this is reduced to half-erown points, which of course comes out very high in each game. It is altogrether forbidden, by the way, for anybody to withdraw for the evening until the King gives the sign, and breaks up the party by rising himself. When he goes up-stairs King Edward has supper in his private room, becoming host himself, and invites his enterts iner and one or two of the men to join him.
