

BUILDING UP A MODERN PORT—HOW AUCKLAND IS PREPARING TO ACCOMMODATE ITS GROWING SEABORNE COMMERCE.

The upper photo, a panoramic view of part of the eastern lighthouse works, shows on the right two of the old Quay-street jetties while further to the left is the large concrete pier and wharf now nearing completion. On the extreme left is part of the new Railway wharf, the end of which is seen on the extreme right of the lower panorama. This photo, shows the ferro-concrete structure which is rapidly replacing the old wooden Quay-street wharf.
