Mr. W. F. Fawcett.

that sets Mr. J. C. Williamson's teeth on edge. The Misses Austin and Miss Bancroft are not only clever but conscientious, and the combination produces a charm that one does not fully appreciate at the first blush, though it quickly makes itself felt. Mr. McMahon is a talented young comedian who is just beginning to feel his way, and will yet achieve a reputation. The exceptions alluded to are, of course, Miss Branton and Mr. Olly Deering, two sterling artists. Miss Branton was no less than seven years in the exclusive Brough Company, and Mr. Deering's career goes back further than the recollection of the present generation. People are in the habit of saying that he belongs to the "good old school," but in truth there are none who belong more
