

During the continuation of their discussion with the Premier on matters connected with labour, the Employers' Federation suggested that with reference to compensation for accidents, there should be examination of injured employees by a medical man appointed by the Government, and persons injured periodically report themselves to Government officials. It was also represented that various technical requests that had been made by the Trades Conference would greatly hamper owners of engineering works. The Premier urged that both sides should stand by the Arbitration Act. As a body the workers were all right, but some of their leaders did not look far enough ahead, and would lead their fellows into trouble. While employers had prospered the workers were in the same position as they were years ago. It was the Government's duty to hold the scales between the employers and employees, and be just. He would be no party to favour one side at the expense of the other. He knew that industry could not bear much more than it had at present to carry.

Most politicians need a box
To drown their ravings in.
The Poet wants a few hard knocks,
The "Dead-beat" wants some "tin."
The Pillman makes a bold display
The public to allure.
But the man who sneezes night and day
Wants WOODS' GREAT PEPPERMINT
CURE.
