Speaking of the close of the breeding season in England, a writer in "Sporting Life" makes the following allusion to "Old Jack":—"A great feature of the season has been the success of the Carbines, and on this the Duke of Portland is much to be congratulated, as His Grace perceived that there might be something wanting in the stoutness or staming of perceived that there might be something wanting in the stoutness or stamina of the St. Simons, and to prevent such a falling off he got back the Musket blood that had hit so well with him before in the case of Memoir and La Fleche, out of Quiver, by Toxophilite, the sire of Musket. The price, 13,000 guineas, was thought to have been over heavy at the line the Duke baid it. but results have time the Duke paid it, but results have proved that that the money was well laid out."
