

Typical Incidents in Connection with the Recent Revolution amongst the Russian Troops.

BRITISHERS ON THE RUSSIAN FRONT WITNESS ONE OF THE GRAVEST DISASTERS OF THE WAR. Commander Locker-Lampson, M.P., in foreground, stops a motor car and asks for news of the demoralised Russian forces. The necessity for re-introducing the death penalty to prevent desertions from the army was made manifest by the serious nature of the situation.

M. Kerensky, Premier and Commander-in-Chief of the Russians, attends the funeral of a Cossack killed defending the Government. The illustration shows a Cossack's coffin. M. Kerensky, who was in uniform, and other Ministers were present in the cortege as it passed through the streets of Petrograd.

Demoralisation of a large section of Russia's soldiers. British officers help to hold up deserters on the Russian front. Nothing could illustrate better the chaos existing in our ally's army than the series of photographs just to hand. British officers are endeavouring to do something to stop the rot. The above picture shows a motor lorry held up and the men taken off. Captain Gerrard (x), who is acting as interpreter to the British, is a splendid type of Russian officer, who has repeatedly risked his life during the retreat.

AN EXCITING INCIDENT DURING THE WHOLESALE DESERTION OF THE RUSSIAN ARMY. A Russian soldier of the old school meets two deserters and attacks them with his rifle. He was incensed at their unpatriotic conduct.
