The factor which counts for so much in choosing a car for colonial use is the matter of upkeep. The factor which has made the A.C. so popular amongst colonial motorists is its low maintenance cost. This fact has been appreciated by those who need a car for use many miles from a town and proper garage facilities; where the necessity will not continually arise for extensive mechanical overhaul and repair.

The simplicity of the A.C. in design and construction is the keynote of its success. There is no detail which you cannot immediately understand, master and adjust yourself.

The excellent quality of all materials which go into its manufacture means long wear and consistently good service without the necessity for constant part replacements.

The running expenses of the A.C. are claimed by every owner to be lower than that of any other car of its weight and power. Ask any A.C. owner, and base your decision on what he will tell you—not what we say.
