

MODERN HOUSES

Modern houses are planned so that their interiors will be compact and labour-saving. The rooms are usually small, and built-in fittings reduce the space required for furniture. Ceilings are low, and windows spread horizontally instead of vertically—a sunroom with one or two walls almost entirely windows is a popular feature. Most new houses are one storeyed and wooden, but two storeys are found in some larger homes.