LAW REPORT.

("N.Z. Law Reports," Vol. xxviii, pages 502, 503, and 504.)

REX v. O'KEEFE.

Criminal Law—Practice—Indictment—Adding Count—Distinct Offence—Not disclosed by Depositions—Leave of Judge—Ground upon which given—"The Crimes Act, 1908," Section 407.

Seemle, That where, after an accused person has been committed for trial, the consent of a Judge is asked ex parte, under section 407 of "The Crimes Act, 1908," to add a count to the indictment to be preferred against him, charging him with an offence not disclosed in the depositions and not investigated in the Court below, the Judge has jurisdiction to give such consent; but such jurisdiction should only be exercised upon sufficient prima facie evidence being placed before him.

The accused was committed for trial upon a charge of stealing two sheep. After his committal the consent of a Judge was asked for by the Crown ex parte to add a count in the indictment to be preferred against him, charging him also with stealing a lamb. No mention of this lamb had been made during the investigation before the Magistrate, and the depositions contained no reference to this charge. In support of the application an affidavit by a detective was read, stating that after the accused was committed for trial his premises had been searched, and the skin of a lamb found at the bottom of his sheep-dip, which had been identified as the property of the prosecutor. The consent to add the count was granted.

MOTION to quash a count of an indictment.

Skerrett, K.C., and Pownall, for the accused, in support of the motion.

Myers for the Crown and contra.

COOPER, J. :—

It is unfortunate that there has been no reported ruling of this Court upon an application of this description, but I think that the Court had jurisdiction to give consent, and that it properly exercised its discretion. Reg. v. Bradlaugh (15 Cox C.C. 217) does not apply. That case was under the Vexatious Indictments Act, but, even so, the remarks of Mr. Justice Hawkins rather tend to support the exercise of the discretion of the Court in a case like this than to negative it. In that case there was no reference in the depositions to the counts which were afterwards added, nor was there any reference in the depositions in this case. The Recorder in that case gave leave to add two other counts for libel, but no material had been placed before him. This was the reason why the rule was made absolute. There was a mere general suggestion that the defendant Bradlaugh had published some other libel, but no evidence of such libel was placed before the Recorder, nor any evidence tending to show that any such libel had been published. In the present case there was a clear intimation by Mr. Myers, which is not disputed, that the circumstances which are stated in Mr. Broberg's affidavit did not appear on the depositions, and that the charge which I gave leave to add was not founded on the depositions, and, further, the material upon which it was asked to found the count was properly laid before me. In Mr. Broberg's affidavit he says, "I searched the premises of John O'Keefe after O'Keefe was committed for trial, and obtained from the bottom of his sheep-dip the skin of a lamb, which has been identified by Robert Henry Robinson as the property of Arthur Martin." That is to say, Broberg found upon the premises of the prisoner the skin of a lamb belonging to the prosecutor. That is sufficient prima facie evidence to justify the adding of a count. It is, of course, possible that during the progress of the trial it may appear to the Court that some injustice may arise if this count should go to the jury. The Court may then quash the count, and it is quite clear that if Mr. Skerrett asks the Court for a severance of the counts, and that this count should not go before a jury with the other counts, and that the trial should be postponed on this particular count, I should sever the charge. I did not make this order without carefully considering the circumstances. I was reluctant to make it, and I did not make it until I had searched for a precedent in this Court, and I found that an order upon similar material had been granted by Sir James Prendergast in Regina v. Brown, a case which has not been reported. In that case the indictment was for abortion. The Crown applied ex parte to add a count to a bill of indictment alleging another act of abortion. No evidence of this further Act was disclosed upon the depositions. The evidence had been discovered since the accused person was committed for trial, and the material His Honour acted upon was an affidavit establishing a prima facie case of the further alleged act of abortion. His Honour granted the leave, and the grand jury found a true bill upon both charges. Mr. Jellicoe moved to quash the second count, and after argument the motion was dismissed. I think the case of Reg. v. Bradlaugh is clearly distinguishable, and that the remarks of Mr. Justice Hawkins really go a long way to answer Mr. Skerrett's argument. I shall follow the case of Reg. v. Brown and dismiss the motion. If it is suggested that the least injustice may arise to the prisoner through adding this count, if a severance is asked for in this case I shall grant it, and if an adjournment on this count is asked for, there are, in my opinion, strong reasons for granting such an adjournment.

Skerrett, K.C.—I do not ask for a severance, and I am prepared now to go to trial on the added count.
