

MYERS.—No, I cannot do that, for this reason: that if those twelve are ordered to stand aside the panel is one before which I would not try this case, for reasons which I need not indicate. I am prepared to meet my friend to this extent: I am prepared to allow this case to stand over till Monday.

WILFORD.—If my friend will take the course of standing those jurors aside I will undertake not to challenge a single juror.

CHAPMAN, J.—I do not think you can arrange such a matter as that. You must reserve your right to challenge, and the Crown must reserve its rights. In a single case such a thing as the Crown acting in this way on the suggestion of the prisoner may be proper, but not under such an arrangement. Within certain limits that has at times been done, but only for some special reason and in isolated cases. I must presume that the Crown Prosecutor has some reason for saying that he does not want the case to be tried before the small panel that is left.

WILFORD.—Then I accept the offer to take the case before a fresh panel.

CHAPMAN, J.—That is the proper solution.
