Report of Analysis by Professor Black, Colonial Analyst:—

University Laboratory,
Dunedin, 21st Oct., 1878.

Thomas Reynolds, Esq.,

Sir,—I have the honour to report on five samples of Port Wine forwarded by you for analysis. These samples may all be described as full-flavoured, fruity, aromatic Wines; possessing in a considerable degree that agreeable fragrance that characterises genuine Port. They do not contain impurities of any kind. The perfect freshness of these Wines from every kind of impurity, the proportion of Sugar and Alcohol which they contain being quite characteristic of unadulterated, unmanipulated Wine, together with their rich fragrance, arising from aromatic ethers, should strongly recommend them, and gain for them good place in the colonial market.
