PREACHING AND PRACTICE

THREE things, according to the universal consent of the patriots, the politicians, and the pressmen of the great British Empire, make a Hun; and the three are: violation of pledges, oppression of the weak, and outrages on innocent people. Go back five years and read our enlightened and honorable daily papers, and see to what a fury of rage and tears our editors, our reporters, our anonymous correspondents lashed themselves when they contemplated Prussian pledge-breaking, Prussian oppression of Poland or Belgium, and Prussian crimes against humanity. Reflect how in those days it was declared to be the solemn religious, patriotic, inevitable duty of every able-bodied man to go forth to make war against those who were guilty of these things—not because they were Prussians, but because of the things they did. To stand by and see poor little Poland and poor little Belgium overrun
