

The missionary William Williams was one of the first to make an informed estimate of the Māori population of the North Island, in 1834. This coloured lithograph shows William and his brother Henry Williams, also a missionary, calming hostile Māori by quoting from the Bible in the Māori language. It comes from the second volume of Illustrations of Missionary Scenes (1856). Artist unknown. (ATL ref. PUBL-0151-2-013)
