Everyman's Hut

"When all our hopes are gone,
'Tis well our hands must keep toiling
on for other's sake:
For strength to bear is found in duty
done;
And he is blest indeed who learns to make
The joy of others cure his own heartache."

"Bear ye one another's burdens," wrote the Apostle Paul, "and so fulfil the law of Christ," and this was so put into effect in his own life, that it was one long repetition of "spending" and "being spent" for the welfare of others, saint and sinner alike.

To-day is a day of sacrifice. The word rings round the world, give, give, give and keep on giving. Money, goods, time, labour—we can all give these, and though it may cause us a little inconvenience and discomfort, yet beyond doubt we derive benefit in every way for ourselves. Having to think of others as well as ourselves is a healthy mental exercise, and when this thought finds expression in a practical form then it is doubly healthy for "it blesseth him that gives and him that takes."

But what is the giving of money, goods, time or labour, compared with the giving of life. Men of the armed forces, and of the mercantile marine, sisters and nurses, as well as civilians, men, women and children are day by day risking and giving their lives that we might live peaceably in this favoured land. Far sadder than this, alas, is the fact that multitudes of those who are thus giving their lives, are going into eternity unprepared to meet their Maker and God, and with no one to stand between them and the judgment of God for their sin.

To be of help, spiritually, as well as physically, to men passing through the camps, is the aim of the "Everyman's Huts." To provide rest, quietness and refreshment for the body, and to lead them always to Christ Who only can give rest to the soul are the ends to which for nearly two years the energies of the Huts have been dictated and we can give thanks to God that these ends have been achieved beyond our wildest dreams. All the Huts operate at a loss and the service is maintained by freewill offerings of Christians throughout New Zealand without any public appeals for assistance, and we look forward to the future with hopes for even better results for "God is faithful" and as His word is read and the Gospel of Christ preached to the men, His promise stands sure that "Them that honour Me, I will honour."

So to all who are making a sojourn in the camps, we give a warm welcome, and a hearty invitation to make the Hut your home while in camp. If you have private problems let us help you to solve them; if you have a job to be done which the restrictions of camp life prevent you from attending to, bring it along and we will do our best for you. Christian boys can meet for study and prayer fellowship and those who would like to be Christians will be helped to find the One to satisfy all their needs, and our motto is "All one in Christ."
"Everyman for Christ."
