Everyman's Hut

"At morn the wise man walked abroad,
Proud with the learning of great fools.
He laughed and said, 'There is no God—
'Tis force creates, 'tis reason rules.'
Meek with the wisdom of great faith,
At night he knelt while angels smiled,
And wept and cried with anguished breath,
'Jehovah, God, save Thou my child'."
"The fool hath said in his heart

"There is no God,"—words written by the Psalmist thousands of years ago are just as true to-day as the day they were written.

Because God is invisible, then His existence is denied. Because the precepts of His word runs counter to the natural will of man and show up the depravity of the human heart, then it is despised and held up to ridicule. Man appears upon this scene, works out his allotted span and passes on, but the word of God endures eternally unchangeable.

During the last generation, the genius of man has made almost unbelievable progress in producing those things which make for the advancement and comfort of mankind generally, but such is the inherent wickedness of the human heart, that, in our day, we see all the genius, all the inventions that a beneficent God has made available for the good and uplifting of the human race, wholly directed to the work of destruction and death. Surely this is striking testimony to the utter inability of man to direct the affairs of the world apart from the guidance of the God who created this earth for the use of man. The Great World War was a war to end war, but God was left out of the post-war construction and the world is now engaged in a more desperate war than ever, and in spite of all the talk—undoubtedly sincere though it may be—that we hear again concerning post-war construction, unless there is a turning to God, a recognition of His Sovereign rule in the affairs of men and a bowing to His word, then no lasting good will come, but only the fevered preparations for a more cruel and bloody war than the present one. Turning to God in the hours of extremity is worthless unless there is a holding on to God after deliverance out of the extremity. He is ever ready to hear the cry for help from a true heart and to answer speedily. But He does not stay were He is not welcome.

Have we become so enslaved to our own passions and wills that we are powerless to break loose and turn to God? If so, then surely there is terrible retribution coming upon us, unless we cease from our own doings and just take the deliverance God is offering us in His Son, for "He was delivered up for our own offences and raised again for our justification" and "neither is there salvation in any other."
