Everyman's Hut

OUR SHARE.

And we ourselves? Are our hands clean?
Are our souls free from blame
For this world-tragedy?
Nay then! Like all the rest,
We had a relaxed our hold on higher things,
And satisfied ourselves with smaller.
Ease, pleasure, greed of gold—
Laxed morals even in these—
We suffered them, as unaware
Of their soul-cankering.
We had slipped back along the sloping way,
No longer holding First Things First,
But throning god's emasculate—
Idols of our own fashioning,
Heads of sham gold and feet of crumbling clay.
If we would build anew, and built to stay,
We must find God again,
And go His way.
(From "All's Well!"—John Oxenham)

"Most of us are hoping that one outcome of this present war will be a general uplift in our national life, a re-awakening to a sense of our duty towards God, a greater striving after the things that make for goodness, kindness, unselfishness and pure living. In short, we hope that the close of this war will find us as a people better in spiritual health than we were when it broke out.

But while we hope for this and pray for this, for our country as a whole, we sometimes forget that if this improvement is to be accomplished it must be through the individual. We often speak of the "British nation" as though it were some abstract thing quite detached from ourselves, overlooking the fact that we are as much a part of and representative of, the nation as anyone else. . . . But what does all this actually mean? . . . Reduced to simple terms it means, among other things, that as a nation we were forgetting God, or giving Him a second place in our lives and interests. Worldly prosperity threatened to be our undoing. There was so much money to spare that we were spending it unwisely on things that drew us away from God, rather than on things that furthered His wishes. We had so much leisure that we had to devise ways and means of killing time—and these were often very igno-noble ways. . . . In all ranks of society there was creeping in an all-pervading disposition to shirk serious work, serious thought, and serious responsibility, while every prominence to things that are least worth while and often to things that are positively harmful.

History has proved again and again that the nation or the individual who is obsessed with money-worship is utterly lost as a moral force; and we were fast becoming money-worshippers of the crudest type. . . . But still more serious was the changing attitude of our nation as a whole towards the things of God. Think how irreverence was permeating all classes, how goodness was openly scoffed at, while badness was applauded, or at any rate condoned. . . . We must resolve to do better in the future. This is only possible through the help of God; and God's help must be asked for in prayer; believing that He will answer the prayers."

The above remarks were published during the South African War, over 40 years ago. We have no difficulty in discerning which road we have travelled since they were written. How much greater is our need of God and how much more perilous is our position before Him. May we heed this warning of a third and greater war and turn again to Him.
