THE PROPLES VICA

Published avery decade

Hon. 19 July 1943

" HO DIV AFGS "

" Last with the latest always "

EDITORIAL

Once again the peace and tranquility of our camp is to be descrated by the metley throng of seekers after knowledge. Ones again will our hitherto phlegmatic Ockey raise his tearfilled eyes and gesticulating arms to the heavens and mouth curses and maledictions upon the heads of the company ration corporals. Once again the cooks will ferret among the growing piles of discarded rations to produce weird and wonderful concostions such as the eyes of man have never seen before. Once again will the comfort-loving members of HQs show their appreclation of all things by their ululant cries. Yet, bombs by any other name are still bembs, and so must be lectured on. Fas be it from us to distate the policy of the Engineers, though we rest content in the knewledge that we can do so. We would concede in all generosity that bombs, whether disposed to be bombs or bombs to be disposed, are still bombs, and come under the heading of dangerous, -bloody dangerous. Yet the instructors from Nov Zealand manage, by guile and protence, to lure keenly ambitious young officers, commission-seeking sorgeants, threestripe-secking corporate and pleasure-seeking sappers to the School of Bombing. Whather it be the suave charm of the Big-Chief instructor, or the maive spoutings of his lowly assistant we do not presume to state; but whatever it be that emanates the lure ... they come ... they learn ... they forget. It gives one a cause to wonder at the fascination of toying with fate. Is it the careless laugh of heroes who do and die of whom we rend but mever see? is it the long awaited chance to visit the home and shrine of ingineers HQ? is it a misguided faith in the backledge of the instructors' skill? or have they just been told to come ???.

Tender Tuesday was the 13 th July for it marked the birthday of your Aditor. Thanks are still being expressed to the Doctor and Murse. The seven days have long since elapsed and visitors are welcome at the home. Please bring a bottle.